The battery connector were also getting really warm under normal use, the wires had become corroded, and some of the wires had broken free from the connector reusing the load capacity of the wires. The Solution: Replace the original 10 gauge cable with 12' 8 gauge battery jumper cables. I would recommend contacting your trolling motor manufacture to see what they recommend before attempting to replace the battery cable or increasing the cable length. Opening the Trolling motor may void your warranty. My trolling motor is no longer under warranty so I am not worried about my warranty. I also checked with my trolling motor manufacture (Minn Kota) to see what wire size they recommend for my trolling motor and for the length of wire. The Conclusion: The longer cable is very nice. I tested the motor with the new cable on the water. It had great power and the battery connectors didn't get hot. The extra cable was great as I could now move the battery to a different areas on the boat to even out the weight. Battery Connection: Crimped, and soldered. Good solid connection between wire and battery connections. Battery Connection: Sealant in the joint and Heat Shrink Tube. The goal is to lock out as much corrosion as possible and for as long as possible. Trolling Motor Connection: Crimped, and soldered Trolling Motor Connection: Heat Shrink Tube The Power Connections. Always take a picture of the wiring before you start unplugging wires. You can see the negative wire goes to the left side, and the positive to the right side. The Original Battery Cable: Short The Original Battery Connector: loose, some wires have broken off, and they get warm under normal use.
